about the camp that morning when Laura returned from her early ride. The the Chinaman, sitting on a stool in front of the wagon with a dish of potatoes between his knees.

"Say, where's every one?" Laura ung out, after she had looked into ra's tent and found it empty.

The Chinaman continued to peel potatoes. He took no notice of the question. Laura touched her horse with the whip and cantered over to his side. At the last moment the animal swerved a little. The Chinaman, trying to draw back hastily, let the bowl slip between his knees. He gazed at the broken pieces in dismay.

"Never mind your silly potatoes!"
Laura exclaimed. "Tell me where every one's gone to, can't you?"

"All gone," he announced. "Cowboys gone workee. Missee gone hurry up find Mr. Quest."

Laura hesitated, puzzled. Just then the professor came cantering in with a bundle of grass in his hand. He glanced at the Chinaman.

"Good morning. Miss Laura!" he said. "You don't seem to be getting on with yur friend here," he added in an undertone. "If you would permit me to offer you just a word of advice, it really doesn't pay to annoy these Chineas too much. They never forget. I didn't like the way that fellow was looking at you, I was watching him all the way from the rise there."

"Pshaw!" she answered. "Who cares what a chink thinks! The fellow's an idiot. I'm worried, professor. Lenora's gone out after Mr. Quest and the inspector. She wasn't fit to ride a horse. I can't make out why she attempted it."

The professor unalung his field assess from his shouldeer and gazed eadily southward.
"It is just possible," he said softly, hat she may have received a warn-g of that."
